

Make the Sugar Program Work for America

June 22, 2017

U.S. Economic Consequences of Big Sugar's Mexico Deal

The Commerce Department last week released the text of amendments to the U.S.-Mexico sugar suspension agreements, which make a bad deal even worse for U.S. consumers and American companies of all sizes that use sugar in the products they make.

Impact of the U.S.-Mexico Sugar Suspension Agreements on America

Bottom Line: Sugar prices in America will rise, despite already being 80 percent higher than what the rest of the world pays for sugar. Consumer costs will increase by an estimated $1 billion a year on top of the current $3 billion annual burden, and 600,000 jobs in America's food industry will be put at risk. This is all to benefit one small interest group.
